

Future on Display at USHL Prospect Combine

May 15th, 2010

The Clark Cup has been awarded to the Green Bay Gamblers to conclude the 2009-10 season, but only two days later, USHL clubs are looking to the future to find the players that could one day play for a USHL championship themselves.

This weekend, the USHL will conduct its third of three spring USHL Prospect Combines as 1994 birth year players showcase their talents at the Arctic Ice Arena in Orland Park, Illinois. Players will hit the ice for five games throughout the weekend and will also be put through a series of off-ice testing in front of coaches, general managers, and scouts from around the USHL.

The event is part of the first-of-a-kind concept launched this year by USHL Player Development for identifying and evaluating the top hockey players in North America. This weekend holds extra importance as this pool of players has the potential to be selected in the USHL Futures Draft, which takes place on Tuesday, May 18th.

"These young players are at a key stage in their development and are being identified as potential prospects for the USHL," said USHL Manager of Player Development Bob Thornton. "With the Futures Draft coming up, this combine gives USHL teams one last look at this age group of players before making their final draft decisions. The weekend also allows us to continue our education efforts to help these players understand what it takes – both on and off the ice – to play in this League."

Players were invited to the Combine based on season-long scouting and evaluation efforts by USHL Player Development. In addition to each player competing in five on-ice scrimmages over three days, the USHL has taken it a step further to include extensive off-ice testing (strength, agility, and core). Leading the testing process is Mick Ferras, who has more than 15 years of experience training players at all levels of hockey including the NHL, and Kevin Ziegler, strength and conditioning coach for the USHL's Sioux Falls Stampede and the NHL's Tampa Bay Lightning.

Both scouts and staff from USHL Player Development are managing the event while coaches, general managers, and scouts from each USHL Member Club are in attendance to further their evaluation process of players who are the future of the League.
